FATAL JOKE

KIRBYVILLE, Texas (AP) — State police say a collision in which two women were killed when their car crashed head-on into a vehicle carrying their husbands may have been caused by a playful "joke" that backfired.

The crash occurred Saturday on a rural road three miles east of this southeastern Texas town. The women were identified as Denise Balew, 25, and Cheryl Pearce, 21, both of Call. The men were not injured.

Department of Public Safety officer O.W. Lane said the two women were returning from work in a compact car being driven by Mrs. Balew. Their husbands, Michael Balew and Timothy Pearce, were coming from the opposite direction in a pickup driven by Balew.

Lane said the two men had planned to meet their wives on the road and tell them they were going hunting. But when the drivers came in view, Lane said, they recognized each other and both swerved into the opposite lane apparently in a playful attempt to scare the other.

Both drivers then swerved back to the appropriate sides of the road, but Lane said Mrs. Balew apparently swung her car too far to the right and lost control of the car, which lurched into the path of the pickup truck being driven by her husband.

Billy Connolly

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Billy Connolly started singing because he couldn't figure out how to end his comedy routines.

He says he started show business to support a hippie life.

This year, the Scot, who talks in a cheery manner, performed in the United States for six weeks. "I started, opening for Manhattan Transfer," Connolly says. "I went with Elvis Costello, where I bombed completely in St. Louis. It was a poor audience. It was a great experience."

"I joined Dr. Hook and had the time of my life. I got a standing ovation. You're very much a victim of the headliner and the type of audience he pulls."

"It was good for me, playing here, because I'm not famous here. It teaches me humility. I need an injection of humility every now and then. I think I get unbearable."

Connolly says he's well known in Scotland. He thinks maybe more Scots know who he is than know any other living Scotsman.

His shows are half and half comedy and music. Connolly says "My songs are like a full stop with exclamation mark to what went before. I can never work out how to get out of my routines. So I stick a song on "The comp around to set halls, taking people — a th with at all," I think people theater. I'd would be better bus and taking theater."
