Pipeline le

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A leak has forced the Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. to shut down the 800-mile transAlaska oil pipeline, halting the flow of 1.2 million barrels of crude oil daily, a spokesman said.

The size of the leak, which was discovered Sunday, was "something less than 500 barrels" said Alyeska spokesman Sam Akin. About 200 barrels had been recovered from the site, in a mountain pass 165 miles south of Prudhoe Bay, he said.

The leak was located in Atigun Pass by a pilot flying for Alascom, a telecommunications company, Akin said. The seepage

Slightly injured

Two persons were treated and released at Abraham Lincoln Memorial Hospital following an 8 a.m. Tuesday accident. The crash, which totalled the station wagon in which they were riding, occurred about three miles west of Lincoln on Fifth Street Road.

Driver of the vehicle was Anita L. Ward of 1416 Fourth St. She was ticketed by Logan County Sheriff's Department for failure to reduce speed to avoid an accident.

Investigator Terry Sabo, said the vehicle, which was owned by the passenger James Skelton, was westbound and at the beginning of the S-curve at the end of the bridge for some reason went off the road. The vehicle bounced from the north to south side of the road, went into a deep ditch, rolled once and came to rest on its wheels against some trees. A total of 412 feet were travelled by the vehicle.

Both Ward and Skelton were taken to the hospital following treatment at the scene by Lincoln-Logan Ambulance Service paramedics.
