PLASTICS INDUSTRY

NEW YORK (AP) — About 1.5 percent of the total oil and natural gas consumed in the United States each year is used to produce the petrochemical feedstocks from which most plastics resins are made, according to the Society of the Plastics Industry.

CHEMICAL ENGINEERS

NEW YORK (AP) — During the next few years record numbers of new chemical engineers are expected to be seeking jobs in chemical process industries, according to Chemical Engineering magazine.

Luring students to enroll at U.S. chemical engineering schools are high starting salaries and plentiful job opportunities, says the publication.

It says the survey found that demand for chemical engineers will continue strong for the next three years but will not keep pace with the "onslaught of graduates."
